Public Health England Knowledge and Data Gateway

About the gateway

What the gateway does

Public Health England (PHE) provides many high quality data and analysis tools and resources, the PHE data and knowledge gateway provides direct access to these resources.

Who it is for

The resources help local government and health service professionals make decisions and plans to improve people's health and reduce inequalities in their area. They can be used by anyone with an interest in understanding the health of the population and how it varies across the country.

Restricted access content

You don't need to login to access most resources. However, some resources require eligible users to register and login, to protect certain types of data. These resources are marked with a padlock (🔒) in the gateway. Information about how to register will be available on the individual resource web page.

Types of content

The resources cover a wide range of public health areas, including:

- specific health conditions – such as cancer, mental health, cardiovascular disease
- lifestyle risk factors – such as smoking, alcohol and obesity
- wider determinants of health – such as environment, housing and deprivation
- health protection, and differences between population groups, including adults, older people, and children.

The tools were produced by organisations that are now part of PHE, including public health observatories, the Health Protection Agency, cancer registries, UK screening programmes and the National Treatment Agency for Substance Misuse.
